Honorifics Explained v

Honorifics Explained

Throughout the Del Rey Manga books, you will find Japanese honorifics left intact in the translations. For those not familiar with how the Japanese use honorifics and, more important, how they differ from American honorifics, we present this brief overview.

Politeness has always been a critical facet of Japanese culture. Ever since the feudal era, when Japan was a highly stratified society, use of honorifics—which can be defined as polite speech that indicates relationship or status—has played an essential role in the Japanese language. When addressing someone in Japanese, an honorific usually takes the form of a suffix attached to one's name (example: "Asuna-san"), is used as a title at the end of one's name, or appears in place of the name itself (example: "Negi-sensei," or simply "Sensei!").

Honorifics can be expressions of respect or endearment. In the context of manga and anime, honorifics give insight into the nature of the relationship between characters. Many English translations leave out these important honorifics and therefore distort the feel of the original Japanese. Because Japanese honorifics contain nuances that English honorifics lack, it is our policy at Del Rey not to translate them. Here, instead, is a guide to some of the honorifics you may encounter in Del Rey Manga.

-san: This is the most common honorific and is equivalent to Mr., Miss, Ms., or Mrs. It is the all-purpose honorific and can be used in any situation where politeness is required.

-sama: This is one level higher than "-san" and is used to confer great respect.

-dono: This comes from the word "tono," which means "lord." It is an even higher level than "-sama" and confers utmost respect.

-kun: This suffix is used at the end of boys' names to express familiarity or endearment. It is also sometimes used by men among friends, or when addressing someone younger or of a lower station.

-chan: This is used to express endearment, mostly toward girls. It is also used for little boys, pets, and even among lovers. It gives a sense of childish cuteness.

Bozu: This is an informal way to refer to a boy, similar to the English terms "kid" and "squirt."

Sempai/Senpai: This title suggests that the addressee is one's senior in a group or organization. It is most often used in a school setting, where underclassmen refer to their upperclassmen as "sempai." It can also be used in the workplace, such as when a newer employee addresses an employee who has seniority in the company.

Kohai: This is the opposite of "sempai" and is used toward underclassmen in school or newcomers in the workplace. It connotes that the addressee is of a lower station.

Sensei: Literally meaning "one who has come before," this title is used for teachers, doctors, or masters of any profession or art.

-[blank]: This is usually forgotten in these lists, but it is perhaps the most significant difference between Japanese and English. The lack of honorific means that the speaker has permission to address the person in a very intimate way. Usually, only family, spouses, or very close friends have this kind of permission. Known as yobisute, it can be gratifying when someone who has earned the intimacy starts to call one by one's name without an honorific. But when that intimacy hasn't been earned, it can be very insulting.

Chapter 28: Honey My Love♥

Good for you, Wacky. You got a new nest.
She's probably relieved that her arch-nemeses Mar-tan and Seimei are gone.
Agreed.
She sure is taking it easy.
Bakaaaawky!

I'll go cut it. I'll only be a minute.
I'm not fighting!
What's with you guys? You fighting or something?
What are talking about? You cheated.
Really, I'm a millimeter taller!
Kinta's just sulking because I got taller than him.

You just told me to fatten up and get some flab!
Ah! Kinta! Don't take the bigger piece!
Now, now. Here, I've cut the baumkuchen.
What's that!?
If you hate it so much, then why don't you fatten up and add some extra flab to the soles of your feet and your scalp?
It'd make you a little taller.
Noth-ing.
Eh?
It's like there's three Hanas.
Ugh, that's so immature.
Don't be so spoiled! The older brother always gets priority!
The older brother always gives up the bigger piece for his younger brother!

Itoigawa-sempai...!?

He's definitely hiding something.
He hasn't been coming to club, and he has been acting weird for a while now.
Why on earth would something like that be on the market?
And that photo was taken in Izumi's room, wasn't it?
Huh? The gate's open.
What are all those people doing here?
We're almost at Izumi's house.
What do you mean "really was"!?

RANRAN
I'd like to go somewhere cool for our summer training camp.
WHAP
WHAP
Eeeeh? We're having another training camp?
The seniors in the other clubs have already retired.

It was quite a find.
Leave it to me. There was a nice place at Towada Lake, and we just bought it to use as a summer home.
Heh heh heh.
It must be nice to get good grades!
We are an escalator school, after all.
On the border between Aomori and Akita prefectures.
Where's Towada Lake again?
Towada Lake, huh? Sounds nice.
Eeeeeeeeek!
BAAAAAM!
If you go to Aomori, you just have to go to Mt. Osore!!

Did you have it often?
That's pretty Western for your era.
It was Hana-san's only specialty.
Of all the servants who came here, she was the best at making apple pie.
Let's eat!
Hana-san would bake apple pie,
And make my favorite Darjeeling tea.

It's fun to have Izumi like this,
But we can't leave him this way forever.

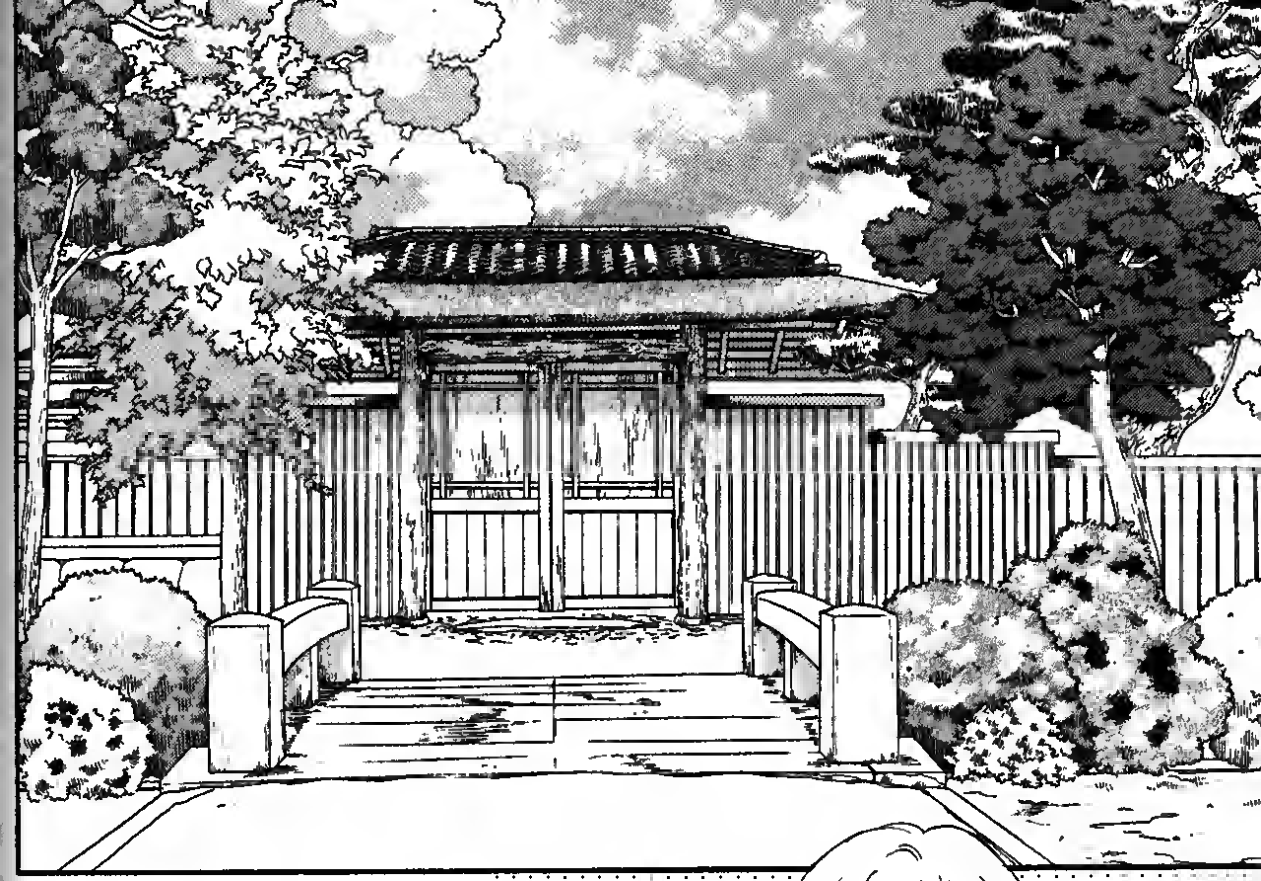
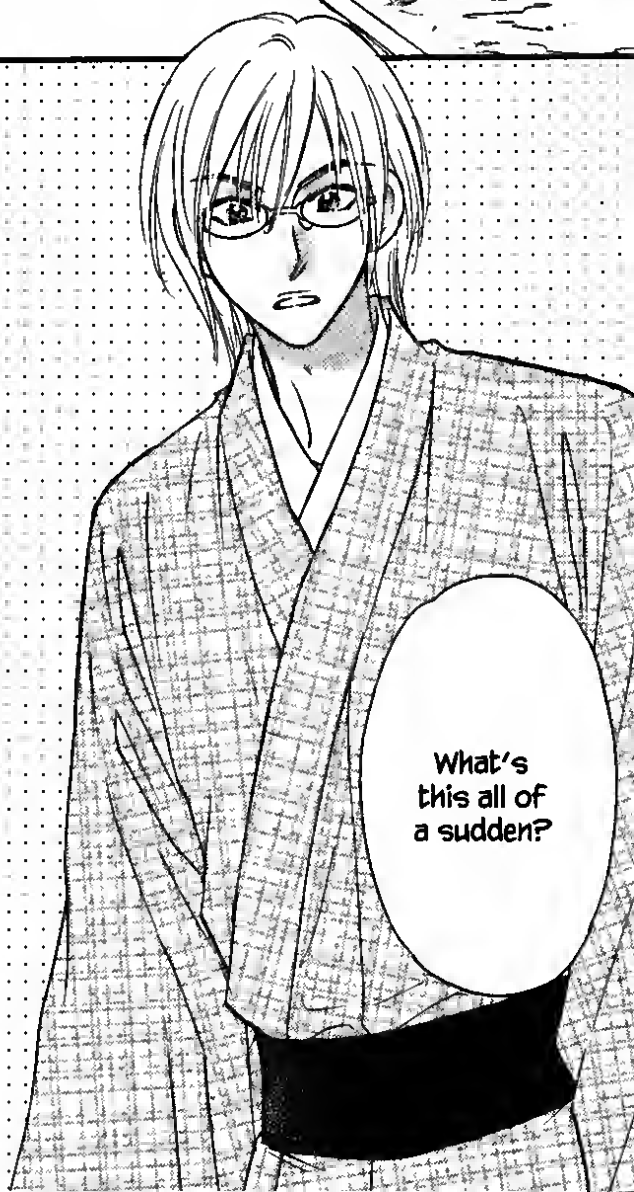
MUNCH MUNCH
He said he'll be back the day after tomorrow.
Natsuki-sempai is in Kyoto for a memorial service, right?
If Natsuki-sempai and Itoigawa-sempai were here, they could have had some. I feel kind of bad for them.
But it's sooooo good.
Oh, but then there'd be less for me!
Ah!
What about Itoigawa-sempai?
Wait a minute! Don't eat it like that, Izumi-sempai! You're wasting it!

Wha?
Shut up.
Apparently he was given charge of some prince from somewhere and told to look after him.
Prince? You mean that guy everybody's into...?
Something about a handkerchief or a handy-man...
No, the real thing.
From a small country in Europe.
Apparently their parents know each other.
Eeeeehhh!?
Wh-what does Itoigawa-sempai's family do!?
They're the successors of the founder of the Hanakage school of Japanese dance.

You rarely see real princes these days.
A prince, huh? I'd like to see a real prince!
What? You didn't know that?
Well, I don't care...
Successors... that's that thing they always talk about in those two-hour dramas, right...?
Yeah, I haven't been in a while.
Why don't we go to Itoigawa-sempai's house?
Doesn't it sound like fun!?
Rarely? I don't think I've seen one my whole life.
I wanted to take home anything that was left...!!
Eeeehhhh!!?
Well, there's still watermelon, so we'll bring it as a gift.

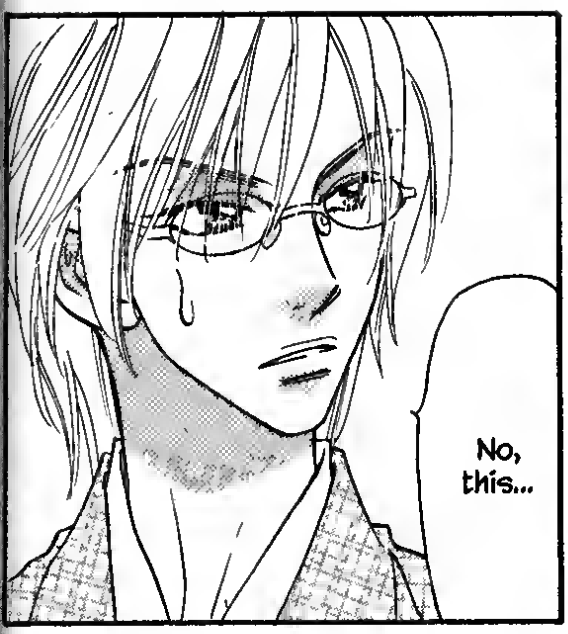


Look, you...
We came to see His Highness!
Here's a gift!



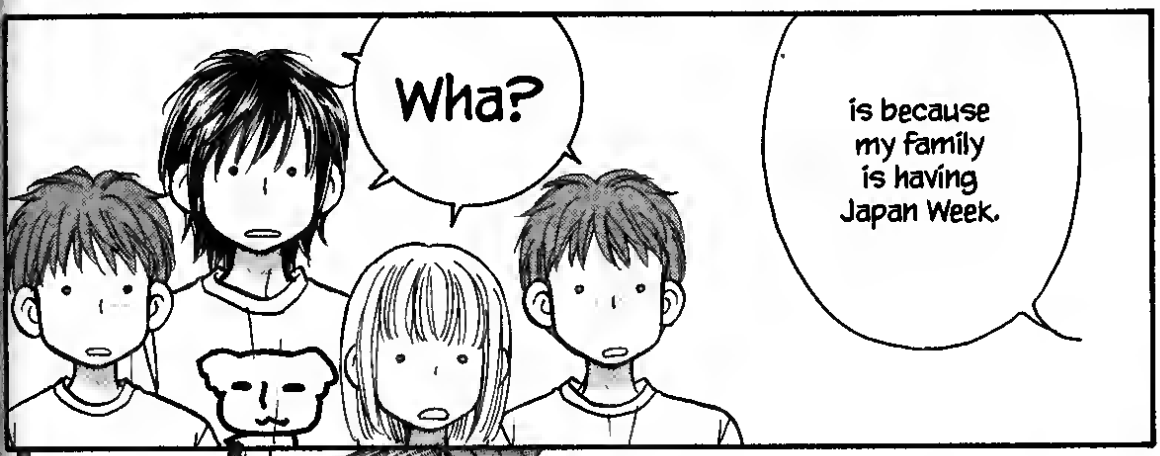
What's this all of a sudden?

No, at one point when I was three, it was established that I'm not cut out for dancing.
Do you really dance, Itoigawa-sempai...?
What?
STARE
Traditional clothes...
Oh, I knew it.
I can tell by looking that you have no talent...
What are you trying to say?
Oh, nothing.
It's so big...
So you're not the designated heir.
I have four brothers above me.



No, this...

But this is unusual, you being in traditional clothes.
No kidding.
Eeehh!? You're the youngest, Itoigawa-sempai!?
That's even more surprising!!



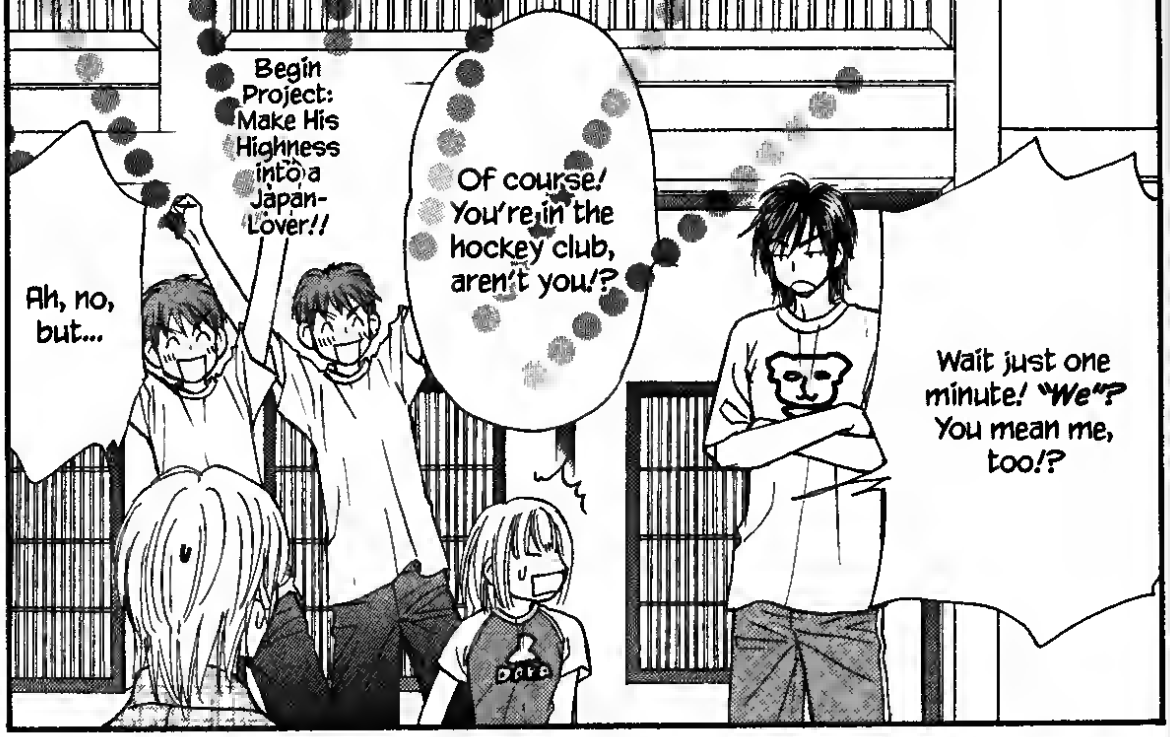
Wha?
is because my family is having Japan Week.

I was told to do something about His Highness's hatred of Japan.
My parents have known his family since they were invited to a Japan fair in their country.

He hates Japan?

Hmmm. And if the heir hates Japan, that would cause some concern about the future.
They're putting a great deal of effort into attracting Japanese businesses.
The king and queen love Japan and are eager to have a cultural exchange.
Yummmmm!
Do they know why he hates us?
That could affect someone deeply...
It's a small country, so even the king is the same class as a prefectural governor.
Apparently it was caused by his first love, a Japanese girl, telling him he's creepy and dumping him.
When we serve him tea, he makes his own European tea, and he torments our Japanese cat. They told me to take care of him because I'm closest to his age, but...
Anyway, he says he doesn't want to take his shoes off, and he can't sleep on a futon, and he won't touch any Japanese food, and eats only imported junk food.

How old is he?
Thirteen.
What? He's still a kid. That's so cute.
It does seem a little unreasonable to ask Itoigawa-sempai to babysit.
All right, Takashi. Leave it to me!
We'll teach His Highness how great Japan is!!



Begin Project: Make His Highness into a Japan-Lover!!
Of course! You're in the hockey club, aren't you!?

This calls for drastic measures.

This is bad. We have to do something. Fast.
I don't like this sense of defeat.

Isn't it more fun to have a wild card?
He got back just at the right time.
Why is Natsuki one of the geishas?
It's a game where you play rock-paper-scissors, and the loser takes off an item of clothing.

If you're going to shoot Oscar, then shoot me!
This sure brings back memories...

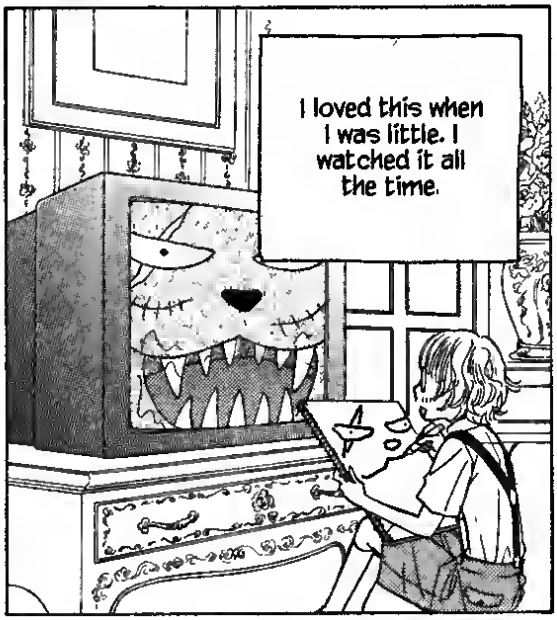
I learned that it was from Japan and I thought it would be a good thing to talk to my first love Marié about.



I loved this when I was little. I watched it all the time.

In Japan, they call people like that otaku.

Do you know this one, Your Highness?
They show Japanese anime in Europe, too, right?
Oscar, Oscar, Oscar the Bear

Can I borrow ketchup, Your Highness?
Even now, I watch it if I find it on.
I can draw Oscar from memory.
There you go.

Eh heh heh
I guess I can't do it as well in ketchup.
Wh-what's wrong!?

Translation Notes

Japanese is a tricky language for most Westerners, and translation is often more art than science. For your edification and reading pleasure, here are notes on some of the places where we could have gone in a different direction with our translation of the work, or where a Japanese cultural reference is used.

Mame-daifuku is a rice cake stuffed with bean jam, much like the one stuffed in Hana's mouth.

Kitakaro baumkuchen, page 6

Kitakaro is a famous confectionary in Hokkaido that makes all kinds of Western desserts, including the baumkuchen, a layered cake from Germany known as the "King of Cakes."

Grasshopper tsukudani, page 22

Tsukudani refers to food preserved by boiling it in soy sauce and sugar to give it a salty-sweet taste.

Kokkuri-san and Cupid-sama, pages 28 and 29

Kokkuri-san and Cupid-sama are Japanese variations of a Ouija board. For Kokkuri-san, because in Japanese tradition foxes, or kitsune, are thought to have supernatural powers, it is believed that the marker, often a coin, is moved not by a spirit of the dead, but by the spirit of a fox, called Kokkuri-san. In most legends, foxes are female. The board the hockey club used in their past Kokkuri-san adventure uses Japanese characters instead of the alphabet. Cupid-sama is very similar, only a pencil is used instead of a coin, and the board includes the special Japanese markings that change syllables' pronunciation for more accurate readings. So while Johnny Depp would be spelled "Shi-yo-ni Te-fu" on a Kokkuri-san board, the Cupid-sama board could change it to "Jiyonii Depu."

N vs ", page 31

On a Kokkuri-san board, Kinta and Ginta's names would be indicated exactly the same way, "Ki-N-Ta," but thanks to the new features on the Cupid-sama board, if the indicator goes to the " marks, the Ki changes to a Gi. So if the pencil goes straight to N, that means Yukio likes Kinta, but if it goes to the ", then she likes Ginta.

Kan ji zai bo satsu..., page 33

Fearing that Hana is possessed, Izumi's first reaction is to start a religious chant to repel the evil spirit. This particular chant is the Japanese version of the Buddhist Heart Sutra, commonly chanted in Zen Buddhist ceremonies.

SHAKE
She's possessed!
She's possessed!
Kan ji zai bo satsu gyou jin han nya ha ra mitsu ta ji shou ken go un kai kuu do itsu sai ku yaku sha ri shi shiki...
BA-BA-BA-BAM

Mushroom, Bombaye!!, page 43

"Bombaye" means "Kill him!" or "Beat him up!" in Lingala. It's popular as a chant at sporting events, particularly boxing matches.

Kinoko no Yama, page 44

Kinoko no Yama, meaning "mushroom mountain," is the name of a popular Japanese chocolate snack. As shown on the box, this snack is made to look like little mushrooms. The stems are made of little cookies, while the umbrella-like part is made of chocolate.

Takenoko no Sato, page 45

Takenoko no Sato, meaning "bamboo shoot village," is like the brother candy of Kinoko no Yama. It's a little cookie surrounded in chocolate that's made to look like a little bamboo shoot.

Moe, page 61

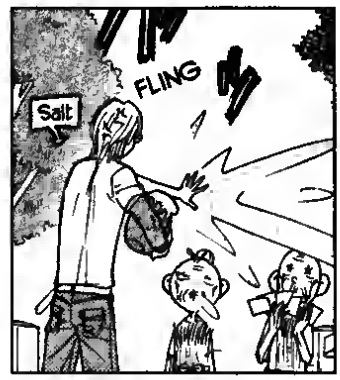
Moe is a phrase used by fanboys and fangirls to describe the type of character from an anime or video game that they have a particular attraction to, and the strong feelings that those characters inspire. Such characters include, but are not limited to, maids and catgirls. Something like a Maid Café would take advantage of moe to attract customers.

Ojou-sama, page 64

Ojou-sama is a respectful way of addressing someone of a higher social status, but lower age, than your own, especially the daughter of a family where one works as a maid, butler, etc. Any girl going to a butler café can expect to be addressed in this manner, and would probably enjoy it as a compliment.

Salt, page 82

In the Shinto religion, it is believed that salt has the power to purify, so Takashi is throwing salt in order to banish the evil that has come before him and purify his home.



Escalator school, page 85

In Japan, students need to take entrance exams to get into most high schools and colleges, but an escalator school has middle school, high school, and even college divisions, so if someone is attending that school in high school, they can go on to college without having to work too hard.

Mt. Osore, itako, and kuchiyose, pages 85 and 86

As Mar-tan says, Mt. Osore, literally "Mt. Fear," is one of the three most haunted places in Japan. This would be a perfect place to have a special priestess called an itako perform a kuchiyose, a ritual in which she will summon the spirits of the dead and speak for them.

Meiji Era, page 88

The Meiji Era refers to the period of time in which the emperor of Japan was Emperor Meiji, from 1868 to 1912. This is the period when Japan opened up to the West and began a major period of modernization.

Yôkai is a general term for all kinds of supernatural creatures found in Japan. Seeing this woman, Izumi assumes that she must be more monster than human.

Analog, page 95

Takashi calls Hana an "analog" for two reasons. First, in Japan, people who shy away from new technology, especially digital technology, are referred to as "analog people," and since Hana clearly doesn't know that you don't hit newer technology, she must be one of them. And second, he's saying that while Izumi is not an old, analog appliance, Hana is.

To answer Hana's question, sembei soup is a kind of Japanese soup made by taking the broth from meat, fish, vegetables, etc. and breaking up sembei, rice crackers, into it.

Showa Era, page 97

The Showa Era refers to the period of time in which the emperor of Japan was Emperor Showa. His reign began in 1926 and ended in 1989. So the beginning of the Showa Era would be the late 1920s.

Rokkon Shôjô, page 108

Literally "six root purification," rokkon shôjô refers to the cleansing of the six roots of perception—eyes, ears, nose, tongue, body, and mind. Takashi uses this as a chant to cleanse Izumi of the spirit that is possessing him.

Densuke watermelon, page 125

Densuke watermelon are a special breed of watermelon with a hard black skin grown in Hokkaido. They're known for being very sweet.

The prince and his handkerchief, page 126

The famous Japanese baseball player Yuki Saito is also known in Japan as the Handkerchief Prince, because he wipes the sweat from his forehead with a handkerchief instead of with his sleeve. Because Hana doesn't see real princes very often, she assumes they're talking about him.

Futon, page 131

Unlike the futons we use in America, a Japanese futon has two parts. The thicker part is laid on the floor and used as a mattress, while the thinner part is used as a blanket. In the morning, it's all rolled up and put away. This kind of bedding is way too Japanese for the Japan-hating prince.

Masuseki and Maku-no-uchi bentô, page 133

Masuseki are special box seats where you sit on cushions to watch sumo tournaments. Paying for the special seating would also get the hockey club a special maku-no-uchi bentô, a boxed lunch named for the maku-no-uchi top division of professional sumo wrestlers.

Meat on the forehead, page 135

Karl may have gotten the idea of writing the Chinese character niku, meaning "meat" or "muscle," from the anime series Kinnikuman, or Ultimate Muscle, as it's known in America. The hero, Kinnikuman (or Suguru Muscle), has the character on his forehead because he is a muscle man. Translating it to "meat" can also mean that the cat is meat (or dead meat), or will be when the writing is completed. Because the character is unfinished, it looks like the character uchi, which means "inside."

Shimofuri sukiyaki and shabu-shabu, page 137

Sukiyaki and shabu-shabu are both kinds of Japanese stew in which the main ingredient is thin slices of beef. Shimofuri, meaning "frost," is fat-marbled beef—the best kind of beef to use for sukiyaki.

Electric Town and Otaku Town, page 140

Akihabara, or Akiba for short, is a district in Tokyo known for selling lots of computer and electronic goods, but also for selling a lot of anime and otaku, or anime geek, goods, so these would both be nicknames for the area.

Canned oden, page 141

Oden is another kind of Japanese stew with various ingredients, including eggs, tofu, daikon radish, etc. Pre-made, canned oden is one of the novelties you can find in Akihabara.

Raoh and the Zeon Army, page 142

Raoh is the villain of the famous manga/anime series, Fist of the North Star, and the Zeon Army is from the famed Gundam series. Since they're in Akihabara, the Ayuharas decide they might as well get some anime merchandise.

Bishôjo figures, page 144

Bishôjo means "beautiful young girl." A bishôjo figure would be a figurine of such a girl. These figures are sometimes just pretty statues, but often depict the girl in a very alluring position.

Natsu-yakko and Hana-yakko, page 146

Geisha often use stage names, so Natsuki and Hana are following their example. Yakko, meaning "person" (especially in reference to a servant), was a well-known geisha name ending.

Yakyûken, page 146

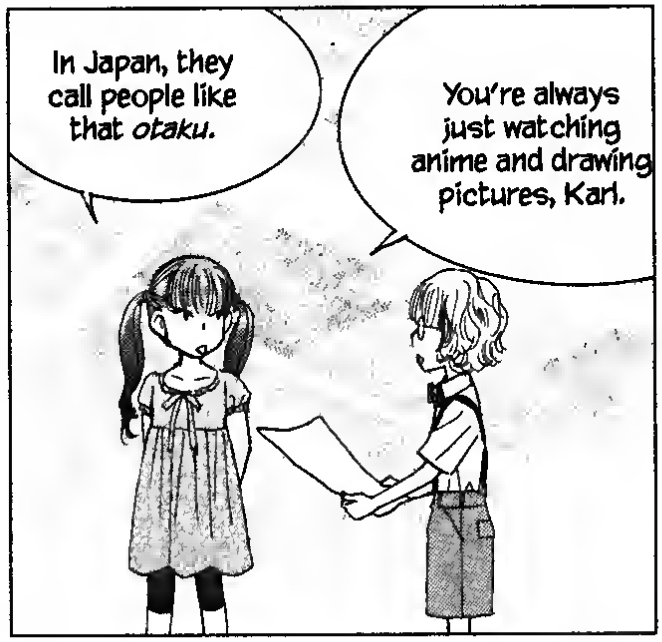
Yakyûken is the name of the game that Izumi describes to Prince Karl. It literally means "baseball fist," and started as a game between two company sports teams. The "fist" refers to "rock-paper-scissors," and originally the game involved singing and dancing to the song the hockey club sings, but no stripping.

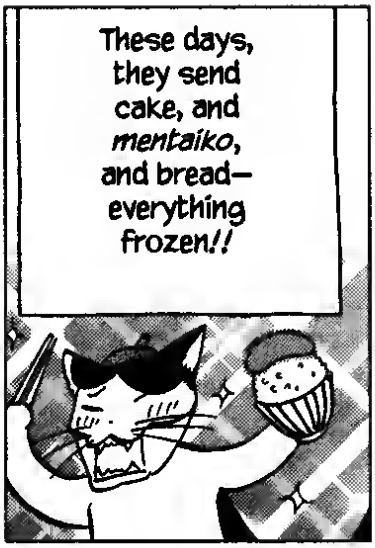
Oscar the Wild Bear, page 154

This is a parody of the anime series Rascal the Raccoon. The term araiguma refers to a kind of raccoon, but can literally mean "wild bear."

Otaku, page 155

Japanese for geek or nerd, especially one who is obsessed with something, usually anime.





Mentaiko, page 164

Mentaiko is a spicy dish made from the eggs of pollock or codfish and red pepper.

Kintoki cream bread and anko, page 164

The Hockey Club ate this very treat at the beginning of volume six. Kintoki is a kind of red bean, and anko is the general term for red bean paste or jam. In other words, these treats are made with anko from kintoki beans.

Honjamaka, page 167

Honjamaka is the name of a Japanese comedy duo. Ishizuka plays the stooge to Megumi's straight man, and his face looks like the one Morinaga-sensei has drawn.

Uji maccha, page 167

Uji maccha is a very high quality brand of maccha, or Japanese green tea. Itoh Kyuemon sells all kinds of desserts made with Uji maccha, and they're all very green in color.

Sacher torte, gyûsuji nikomi, and gyûtan, page 168

Sacher torte is a kind of Austrian chocolate layer cake; gyûsuji nikomi, roughly "stewed beef dish," is a dish of beef and vegetables; and gyûtan is beef tongue.

Katsudon, page 169

Katsudon is breaded pork on rice.
